

MORRIS BANK BID HIGHEST

Board Awards Contract for County Fund Depositories for Three Years.

County commissioners yesterday awarded contracts to banks in the county who recently submitted bids to act as depositories for county funds.

The Morris Bank bid the highest for inactive funds and was awarded $50,000 at the interest rate of 4 1/2 per cent. The Waite Bank's bid of $35,000 per cent for $100,000 was accepted as well as those of three other county banks who bid 5 1/2 per cent. The Prospect Bank was awarded $20,000, the Peoples Bank at Green Camp, $15,000, and the LaDue Bank, $25,000.

Others to Share

Seven other banks in the city and county also submitted bids of 3 per cent for inactive funds and they will be given a share of the inactive funds after the others have received their contracted amounts, commissioners said.

City banks, with the exception of the Commercial, will receive up to $225,000 each of the active funds which are subject to immediate checking. The Commercial will receive up to $20,000. In each case the banks bid 15 per cent for the active funds.

Collection Held

None of the money will be received by the banks until after the first of the year when tax collections are being turned up due to the fact that books in the county treasurer's office are not yet completed and ready for the collection. Commissioners Saturday permitted County Treasurer Paul J. Stratton to extend the year-end for payment of the taxes to Jan. 20. The collection is expected to be more than $1,000,000.

All of the cash will be drawn up between the commissioners and the banks in a period of three years, those now in existence expiring on Dec. 31.

Each bank will be required to give bond for the maximum amount of funds granted it by the commissioners.

Council Approves Sale of City Bond Issue

Recent sale of $25,000 in city bonds to Ryan, Sutherland & Co. of Toledo was approved by council last night.

The bonds will take up notes on a number of recent city improvements. The bonds were previously advertised for sale but no award was made, due to a technical error.

The award was made last Friday by the finance committee of council at a bid of par and accrued interest, at an interest rate of 5 1/2 per cent.

Predicts Marked Benefit from Public Works Plan

Chairman Woods Says Employment and Business To Be Substantially Aided by Federal Expenditure Program.

Editor's Note:—The expected effect of the new public works program is discussed by Arthur Woods, chairman of President Hoover's emergency committee on employment, in the following interview. A subsequent article will reveal the new attitude of employers. Woods has found in dealing with unemployment.

Copyright 1930 by United Press. WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—The new additional public works law enacted by congress and signed by President Hoover will have a marked effect in reducing unemployment and stimulating purchases, in the opinion of Arthur Woods, chairman of the President's emergency committee on employment.

"With this additional opportunity," Woods said "and with all the cooperation of all federal branches together with the help of

"We are merely running a clearing house," he continued, looking about the workmanlike office he is occupying, adjoining that of secretary of commerce Lamont.

"We have a total of $273,000,000 of federal construction in the mill now. Formerly work of this kind moved as slowly as molasses. It was held up by red tape. It was not on the whole the fault of government officials. Now we have the cooperation of the supervising architect, the treasury department, the attorney general and leading committee chairman in congress such as Senator Hiram.

"Our trouble is with red tape in the law."

Communities Cooperate.

"In addition all branches of state and municipal governments throughout the country are working together to slash the red tape which is holding their own jobs in check."

Beginning his third month on his job today Woods has practically completed his organization. He has brought in men from key industries and selected them so that the various sections of the country are represented. Woods and many of his assistants serve without pay.

Woods then spoke on pending legislation which would cut this red tape as it applies to litigation on lands selected as sites for public buildings, and the sending to private concerns of work on specifications. Much of the emphasis of Woods' job is placed on this feature of the work, the aim being to move as much work available as quickly as possible.

Woods again mentioned the desirability of creating jobs during the present emergency which ordinarily might not be necessary.

"This is what the federal government is trying to do in its public works program. It is what every citizen should be doing also."

ty of vision that he had been glad a few moments ago—God in Heaven, glad!—to accept the seeming evidences of Fanny's guilt. He had been willing to rebuild his own tottering pride, his lost faith in his mother, at Fanny's cost!

Then in broken, jumbled sentences he poured out his horror of himself, the bitterness of his lost faith in himself, Fanny, with her gift of perception, caught and understood the intolerable horror and pain. David, his face hidden in his hands, murmured something about forgiveness.

"Of course I forgive you," said Fanny gently, "as you must forgive me. Rather we'll wipe it all out—the bitterness and misunderstanding. How can there be forgiveness between you and me? We were happy once. Let's remember that, and forget the rest."

David reached for her hand and clung to it.

"You remember what you said when you came into the room—that it seemed natural to see me again? That's what I'm feeling now—the naturalness. You and I, hand in hand before the fire! Do you remember those first weeks after we were married, before we moved to the cottage? Have you forgotten all that—or our fine dreams?"

"No," said Fanny unsteadily. She tried to withdraw her hand, but David would not let it go.

"There's one thing still missing," David's voice was pleading. "I couldn't think what it was until a moment ago. You used to have a funny way—an adorably funny way of saying, 'David darling.' Will you say that again, Fan. It's what I've unconsciously been waiting for—for seven years."

Fanny felt the sudden leap of fear a flash must feel when the net first begins glistening about him.

"David, darling," she said in a low voice, but rather as a question, as a reason only half remembered.

"Not that way—the old way."

"I can't, David. The old way belongs to the old days; days when we were happy."

"We'll be happy again—happier. There never was any reason—"

He clutched her hand in desperate appeal. "You can't send me away—now."

"David, darling," began Fanny hesitatingly, and burst into a passion of tears. Not for some minutes, not until she had cried herself out, did David move or speak.

Then he reached over and wiped her eyes, with his own handkerchief, patted her hand.

"I gather you're pretty certain you don't want to come back," he said dryly.

He stretched out his hand. "Give me another chance, Fan. I think you owe me another chance. And we both owe it to Sheila. She's never had a normal home. It's worth a sacrifice to give her that. She'll be off at school, married, almost before we realize. And then I swear if you aren't happy I'll let you go. You won't have to tell me I'll know. Only we'll do it decently and in order."

David went on impulsively one argument tripping on the heels of the other. It was a heinous thing to break up a marriage—even a bad marriage—if there was any other alternative. And their marriage had been bad only in spots. They belonged together. They were still one. Couldn't she feel that?

It was something far from modern which deflected Fanny—her gentleness, her womanliness, her pity; her starved primordial maternal instinct—mothering David—the consciousness, learned and transmitted through a thousand generations, that she were responsible—that, lashed unto death—sacrifices more essential to her spiritual development than any happiness.

"But the bank!"

"Damn the bank," cried David. "I haven't had a vacation in years."

There was no laughter in Fanny's heart half an hour later as she followed David down the stairs to the waiting limousine. At the foot of the first flight he stopped and waited for her.

"Fan, sweetheart, you're not sorry? You don't really mind, do you? It's not yet too late to change your mind."

Fanny made her gallant resolution—David must never know her inner reluctance.

"Of course I don't mind," she said lightly. "It's terribly exciting, running away a second time. Like this."

David kissed her then—timidly, boyishly, as he had on the eve of their first elopement. Fanny was humbled and abashed at the world's shyness in his glance. Impulsively she put her arms around his neck and kissed him again.

David was wiser than she. She, at last had come home.

CHAPTER 27
End of the Heartache

AT AMELIA'S suggestion, David arranged to see Fanny in New York regarding Sheila's future.

Amelia had told him that Fanny was working as a model. He had pictured her in a baby's makeshift surroundings—full pretty perhaps, but then not a little faded, nervously anxious to please. He was not prepared for the evidences of prosperity in Fanny's comfortable, tastefully decorated apartment.

She came forward and gave David her hand.

"It seems natural to see you again," Fanny said quietly.

Fanny made conversation—spoke of Amelia, his journey, the storm outside.

"Good God," David burst out, "do you think I came all the way from Cloughbore—after seven years—to talk about the weather?"

"No, I suppose not. I beg your pardon. It's a little hard to know just what to say. Amelia sent you—didn't she?"

"Yes. I would have come anyway. I had to see for myself what the years had done to you. You haven't changed at all."

They talked then of Sheila and the future.

"There's no reason you should work—never has been a reason," David said authoritatively. "Half of all he had—and he had a great deal more than any one person could spend sanely—was to be put into trust for Fanny's benefit. The income to be hers to do with as she pleased. It was his gesture magnificent—his partial atonement for the injustice that had been done to her by him and his."

Fanny, it now developed, could refuse luxury as well as mere comfort. She was gentle but positive, thanked David, but insisted on going on as she was. David was hurt.

On the heels of his hurt came a surge of anger. And crowding the anger came suspicion. Amelia had told him that Fanny made $60 a week. Why, $60 would hardly pay the rent. He looked meaningly at Fanny's costly gown.

"I see," he said significantly. Fanny caught the glance, the sneer.

"My rent," she said proudly, "is $90 a month. I have but the one room and I sublet in the summer. I cook my own meals. My maid is Mrs. Murphy, the janitor's wife, whom I hire occasionally at 50 cents an hour. My clothes I get at less than cost at the shop where I work. Anything else?"

"No, I—I beg your pardon."

"You might have spared me that, I think."

David got up and walked over to the window. Gone now was his belief in his own integrity of soul. He recognized with agonized clarity that he had been glad a few moments ago—God in Heaven, glad!—to accept the seeming evidences of Fanny's guilt. He had been willing to rebuild his own tottering pride, his lost faith in his mother, at Fanny's cost!

Then in broken, jumbled sentences he poured out his horror of himself, the bitterness of his lost faith in himself, Fanny, with her gift of perception, caught and understood the intolerable horror and pain. David, his face hidden in his hands, murmured something about forgiveness.

CALF-PATH

a not-too-serious analogy

Swearing of wasteful methods of doing business, namely use of Sam
Frost's famous poem, "The Calf-Path."
A few selected lines explain what we mean.

One day, through a primeval wood,
A calf walked home as good calves should;
And left a trail all bent askew,
A crooked trail as all calves do.

And from that day, o'er hill and glade,
Through those old woods a path was made;
And many men wound in and out,
And dodged, and turned, and bent about
And uttered words of righteous wrath
Because 'twas such a crooked path.

The years passed on in swift time fleet,
The path became a village street;
And this, before men were aware,
A city's crowded thoroughfare;
And men two centuries and a half
Trod in the footsteps of that calf.

A hundred thousand men were led
By one calf near three centuries dead—
For thus such reverence is lent
To well-established precedent.

Example from The Calf-Path by Sam W. Frost

A&P does not go blind along the calf-paths followed by business men centuries ago. A&P customers do not have to bear the expense of handling food by old-fashioned zig-zag methods. A&P's methods are the best money-saving methods of today.

RAILWAY HEAD IS OPTIMISTIC

Says Companies Are Prepared for Upswing in Business.

By W. S. COUSINS

Special Editor I. N. S. American, Dec. 23.—"American heads are looking with courage to an upswing in business activity, with the year 1931. When it comes to stand prepared to meet the increased demands of the year 1931 as may be expected."

President of the National Association of Manufacturers, in his annual report to the shareholders of the American National News Service, while business conditions have been far from ideal, and while many problems are facing the country, he is hopeful that a reasonably short period of time will bring about a reasonably short period of time.

Problems Existing

When taking into consideration the conditions that have prevailed during the past year, said the report, the close of 1930 was a year of declining traffic, the resultant lowering of rates. During the 30-year period, with 1920, there was an average weight traffic of more than 100 per cent, but from 1920 to 1930 the increase was less than 10 per cent. For passenger traffic, the average annual increase was 10 per cent for the 30-year period compared with an average annual decrease of three per cent for the nine-year period ended in 1929.

The increase in the use of private automobiles, motor trucks and busses; the increase in transcontinental tonnage handled through the Panama canal, and the increase in traffic handled over land and waterways were cited by Mr. Ashton as the principal reasons for the decline in growth in railroad traffic during the 9-year period ending with 1929. Other contributing factors to this decline are the pipe lines and highpower electric lines to large consuming centers.

Earnings Affected
"Naturally," he said, "this has affected the net earnings of the railroads but through increased efficiency and economy in operation, this loss has been to some extent counteracted. Eventually, however, a limit must even be reached in this."

"The railroad managements themselves are not the only ones vitally interested in the question of fair play when it comes to all competing forms of transportation," Mr. Ashton said, "There is no section of this country but has an equal interest, from the national standpoint, in rendering possible the largest and most adequate, efficient and dependable transportation service by every form, with equal opportunity for all."

Browne Reports on Hardness of Water

Report of Floyd G. Browne, city chemist and superintendent of the sewage disposal plant, on the hardness of the water from Dec. 8 to 21, was accepted and placed on file by council last night. The report shows the hardness of the water during that period ranged from 10.2 grains a gallon on Dec. 21 to 12 grains on Dec. 12. The maximum hardness permitted by the city franchise is 12 grains

COUNCIL BACKS BILL TO GOVERN UTILITIES

Indorses Proposal of Columbus City Council President at Meeting.

Marion council fell in line with city governments all over the state when it gave its approval last night of a proposed bill to be presented at the next legislature, to place producing and transporting gas companies and electric companies under the supervision of the state utilities commission.

A resolution urging the legislature to pass the bill, which is proposed as an amendment to 614-3 of the general code, was unanimously passed.

The bill was brought before council through a letter from Henry W. Worley, president of the Columbus city council, which is fostering it.

The aim of the bill, outlined in the resolution, is to protect Ohio cities from alleged extortionate demands of gas companies.
